

What are you THINKing? Understanding your own THINKing Preferences

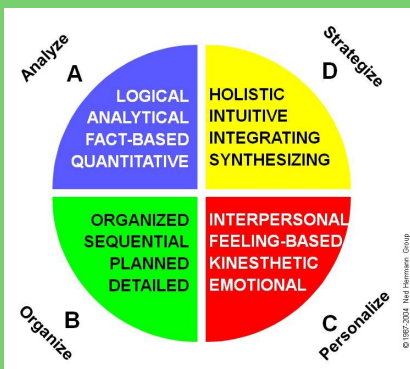

Thursday
April 12th
7:00pm-8:30pm

Registration required. Register online or call the Library to register.

Ever wonder why you can so easily connect with some people while never really aligning with some others? All of us are smart people... is it me? Personalities aside, how you prefer to think about things matters. What if you like to analyze or organize or personalize or strategize, but the person you are communicating with does not? Yikes!!! The Whole Brain® Thinking model will help you – a lot!, as it has many others.

Are you logical, analytical, fact-based and quantitative? Or perhaps a bit more intuitive and integrating, or maybe even emotional and interpersonal?

This abbreviated session has been adapted for our wonderful BFL Community from a version delivered to dozens of companies and universities. You will appreciate not only your preferred and dominant styles of thinking, but how to apply your style to best fit your working and living environments. As a result you will improve communication, comprehension, critical problem solving and performance.

In this engaging, colorful, fun learning workshop, we will understand the practical application of a very powerful tool that can help you navigate better in your personal interactions.

Raymond Infarinato, a Leadership Consultant, is a certified HBDI® Instructor who has worked to solve business problems for dozens of Fortune 500 clients while at PwC and IBM. Previously, he worked in Media and Entertainment for CBS, FOX and Sony Tri-Star Productions. He is likely delivering a Whole Brain® Thinking workshop at an organization near you.
